Substance linked to dyed ice turns creek white: city

JOHN BKILA
jbkila@metroland.com

A mysterious substance that turned a Burlington creek milky white and had most people scratching their heads turned out to be dyed, melted ice.

"The source of the Rambo Creek contamination has been linked to dye from the Burlington Curling Club who leases the land from the City of Burlington. We will support club administration in remedying the problem and ensuring environmental protection for all," the City of Burlington tweeted out late Friday (April 20) afternoon.

"Further testing by the Ministry of the Environment will determine next steps."

COMMUNITY CLEANUP

Graham Paine/Metroland

Field and Stream Rescue volunteer Martin Smith works to clear a creek bank from refuse during the group's annual Earth Day cleanup Saturday. Volunteers took to Shoreacres Creek and its banks along North Service Road in the area of Heritage Road, which was littered with trash and debris.
